Personal insights

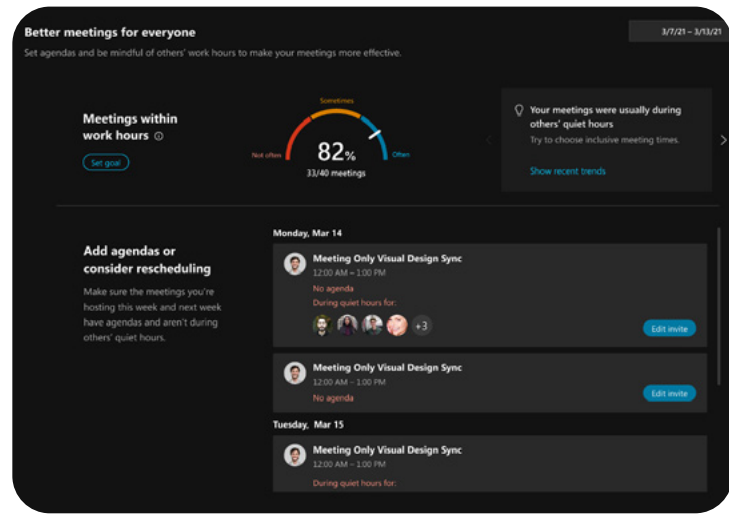

Promotes well-being in a hybrid work world

It can be hard to separate yourself from work, especially when working from home. Personal insights shows you your personal data so you can reflect on how you are spending your time in meetings, consider your colleagues when you're scheduling meetings within quiet hours, and see how your work-life balance can be improved. Your data and insights are never shared with anyone else.

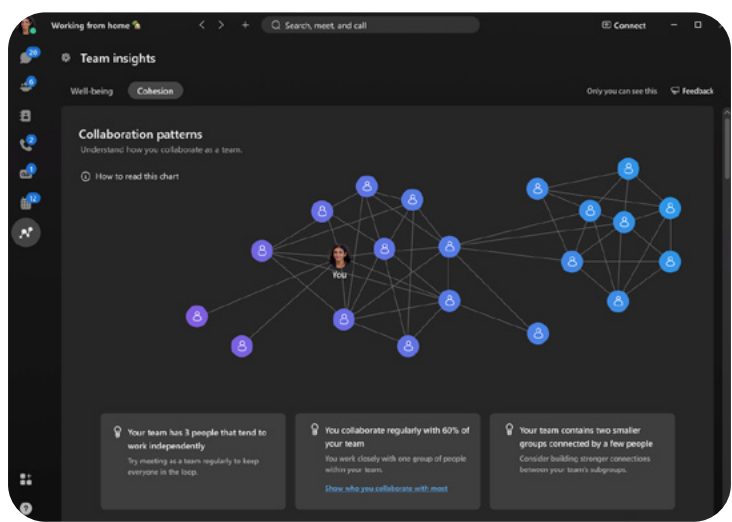

In addition to taking steps to improve your well-being, you now can see who you connect with the most. You can see the people you collaborate with and who you met within the last few days. Your connections are ranked, showing your top ten collaborators for each week, going back 12 weeks.

By having this extra information regarding your meeting habits and collaboration gaps, you can set stronger goals for yourself to improve key relationships.

Team insights

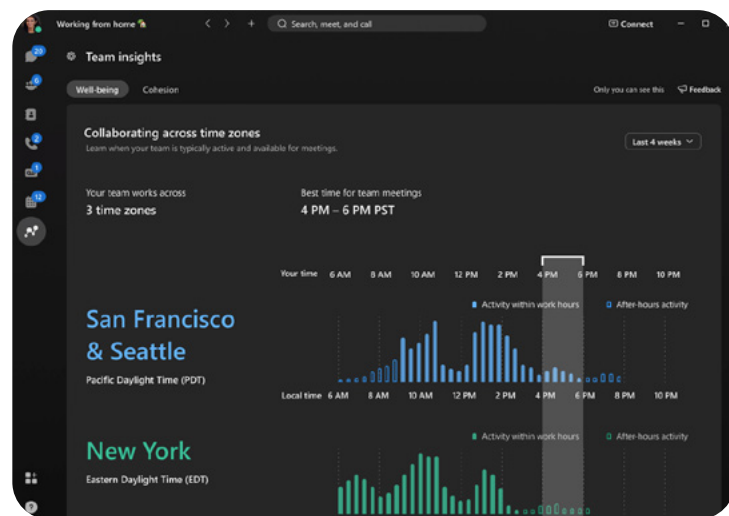

Improves team dynamics

As you work across organizations—outside of your immediate department—you may struggle to understand how relationships affect the overall team dynamic. Team insights gives you insights into teams you are part of, so you can break down silos and collaborate more closely.

Team insights gives you insights into the well-being and cohesion of the teams you are a part of. All teams members can view the same data—no private or individual information is shown.

Team insights highlights the best time to meet as a team, trends outlining light, medium and heavy workloads, and occurrences of back-to-back meetings.

Team insights also provides insights into cohesion for all team members to view and improve on breaking down silos and looping in team mates that may be on the fringes of the team communications.
